

Oracy in the Classroom with the Cambridge Oracy Project

James Mannion and Alan Howe are Associates with the Cambridge Oracy Project and work closely with Neil Mercer, who has worked extensively and internationally with teachers, researchers and educational policy makers on improving talk for learning in schools.

You will learn:

- ◇ What oracy is and what are the practical implications of research?
- ◇ Practical strategies to stimulate and sustain talk for learning, and consider the implications for the classroom.
- ◇ How to assess oracy.

They will explain what is known about the importance of children's spoken language experience for the development of their reasoning, academic attainment and life chances in general. They will relate this to how teachers can use talk most effectively to help children learn and how their oral skills are developed through activities in which they can put language to use.
